Icons: The Armada Portrait

Christine Riding and Robert Blyth

The 'Armada Portrait' commemorates the most famous conflict of Elizabeth I's reign. This absorbing analysis explores the representation of the iconography of Elizabeth I in this significant artwork, and demonstrates it is also an outstanding historical document, summarising the hopes and aspirations of the state, with Elizabeth as its head, at a watershed moment in history.

John Harrison and the Quest for Longitude

Jonathan Betts

The quest to accurately determine longitude at sea was one of the most remarkable endeavours of the 18th century. This is the story of John Harrison, the self-taught English clockmaker, who dedicated his life to creating the marine chronometer which could keep time at sea.

Stripes and Types of the Royal Navy

A little handbook of sketches of the dress and duties of all ranks from admiral to boy signaller

Introduction by Quintin Colville

A very British introduction to the dress and duties of officers and men of the Royal Navy. This nostalgic handbook, reproduced from the archive of the National Maritime Museum, was originally published in 1909. Each rank has information provided on its distinctions and is accompanied by a beautiful colour artwork.

Figureheads

On the Bow of the Ship

Sue Prichard and Jeremy Michell

Often described as the last remnant of the 'great age of sail', ships' figureheads are a fantastic representation of Britain's rich maritime history. Disused since the mid-19th century, those that still exist have formed great works of sculpture in their own right. The National Maritime Museum, home to the largest collection of ships' figureheads in the world, presents this fascinating volume of beautiful photography and curatorial analysis.

About Time Too

A miscellany of time

Royal Observatory Greenwich

How old is Earth? How fast can you think? How long is a light year and how short is a femtosecond? What does Greenwich Mean Time mean? Can you tell the time with flowers? When did 'time' begin?

This light-hearted, illustrated miscellany answers these intriguing questions and presents a whole range of other amazing facts and figures which show the myriad influences that time has on our daily lives.
